“...a beautiful gesture to celebrate and commemorate.” — Londonist

March 17, 2021/Brooklyn, NY—BAM kicked off its spring 2021 season with the US premiere of Arrivals + Departures. Taking the form of a train station arrivals and departures board, signifying those who have been born (“arrived”) or passed (“departed”), the large-scale installation offers a powerful meditation on birth, life, death, loss, and collective grief through the simple, yet potent act of naming. View high-res images here.

Created by British social practice artist duo Yara El-Sherbini and Davina Drummond, the public artwork offers a timely platform to engage with the effects of Covid-19 and the continuing racial and social injustice within our communities. Through this political act of naming, the work questions and changes who is honored through public statues and memorials.

"We are creating space for naming someone as an acknowledgment, a public moment of reflection, marking people in your life," said creators YARA + DAVINA. “When we asked our friends and family to start submitting names, we found the simple act of asking them to submit a name invited them to think about the now. And question: who guides and shapes us? Who has profound effects on us and our own lives? Interestingly these ranged from people naming their children, to old teachers, dead socialists, environmental activists, grannies, and people who have died through acts of social injustice. Who knows what names the public will submit?”

The boards are accessible both in-person and virtually through April 11. The public is invited to submit names online at www.arrivalsanddepartures.net

YARA + DAVINA are a British artist duo who make ambitious and playful public artworks that respond to site, context, and audience. Unfailingly inventive, their artworks are rooted within the everyday, using formats from popular culture, such as mini-golf to jokes, to explore issues that touch on the human condition. They’ve created artworks for multiple world-leading art venues and public organizations across the world such as Tate Modern and Tate Britain, Venice Biennale, National Portrait Gallery, Studio Museum Harlem, The Victoria & Albert, London, ZKM (Germany), HIAP (Finland), Kaunus Art Biennial (Lithuania), Modern Art Oxford, National Maritime Museum, and the ICA. In 2021, they are working on several large-scale public artworks, including Kick Off, a project with the National Trust, UK that explores women's football and the power of communal crafting, and Local Tea, a long-term social practice artwork for the Museum of the Home, London.
