ABOUT
Savannah Bay

Two women in a pristine white room: one young, one old. “Who was she?” one asks the other, referring to a third who had long ago met a boy, fallen in love, and bore his child before drowning herself.

Unfolding in the melancholic half-light of memory, Savannah Bay is a mesmerizing two-character drama by the revered French feminist writer Marguerite Duras (1914–1997)—author of The Lover and screenwriter of Hiroshima Mon Amour—whose stage works are rarely produced in the US. In this New York premiere, Paris’ Théâtre de l’Atelier brings the play’s lyrical dialogue to life, creating an impressionistic tapestry of loneliness and connection in which two people form a special bond in the space left by forgetting.

DIRECTOR’S NOTE

The overarching subject of Savannah Bay is the union of two women and the role play in which they engage—perhaps daily—to recognize one another. Stemming from a hidden and buried traumatic event, which they bring to the surface from a shred of memory, they attempt to win each other over, to recognize and to love one another. The ritual they invent and constantly reinvent allows them to affirm the identity and strength of their relationship and mutual love, which for the duration of their fleeting interaction, demands that they restart every day. In a mental space in the absence of memory, time stops and she is left with infinite solitude. Little by little, through the rhythm of writing, the void fills as love and recognition are built between one unknown woman and her grandmother on the edge of an abyss.

—Didier Bezace
Didier Bezace

Director

Didier Bezace co-founded the Théâtre de l’Aquarium (Cartoucherie de Vincennes) in 1970, where he attended every performance and managed the company until July 1997, at which point he took the reins of the Théâtre de la Commune à Aubervilliers, where he directed pieces by both contemporary and classic authors.

His work has been recognized with a number of awards: in 1995 he was awarded a Molière for his direction of La Femme Changée en Renard by David Garrett. In 1997 he received the Grand Prix de la critique for directing La Noce Chez les Petits Bourgeois and Grand-peur et Misère du IIIe Reich by Bertolt Brecht. In 2004 he received the Prix de la critique for scenography for Avis aux Intéressés by Daniel Keene. In 2005 l’Académie des Molières awarded him two prizes: one for best direction and one for best adaptation of La Version de Browning by Terence Rattigan. In 2011 the SACD (Society of Dramatic Authors and Composers) awarded him the distinguished Prix du Théâtre for his lifetime achievements.

Didier Bezace has also acted in films by Claude Miller, Bertrand Tavernier, Jeanne Labrune, Claude Zidi, and Rêmi Bezançon, and has worked alongside Marion Cotillard.

Geneviève Mnich

Actress

With a degree in literature and two years of study under Henri Rollan at l’École de la rue Blanche, Geneviève Mnich has acted in a number of plays from the repertoire of Molière, Marivaux, and Gorki. She worked with Jean Dasté and Hubert Gignoux at the time of “theatrical decentralization” in France, an innovative program which was initiated by André Malraux to produce theater for a broader audience throughout France. She has appeared in cinema and television alike and alternates between them, yet always holds a preference for the theater.

In cinema she has worked with Bertrand Tavernier (Un Dimanche à la Campagne), Alain Resnais, Bertrand Blier, Raoul Ruiz, Claude Lelouch, Robert Enrico, Michel Spinosa, Martin Provost (Séraphine), and Stéphane Brizé. In theater she has worked with Jean-Pierre Vincent and has since played roles written exclusively by contemporary authors: Jon Fosse with Jacques Lassalle and Frédéric Belier Garcia, Jean-Claude Grumberg and Daniel Keene; Brassai with Maurice Benichou; Fabrice Meliquot with Emmanuel Demarcy Mota; and other contemporary authors with Gilberte Tsai and Zabou Breitman.

She worked with Peter Brook in La Berceuse by Beckett (French version) at Les Bouffes du Nord Theater. From there, she met Didier Bezace and acted in Kureishi’s script adaptation of May and Daniel Keene’s Un Soir Une Ville, in which she played a woman confronted with Alzheimer’s disease.
Marie Vialle
Actress

Marie Vialle is delighted to be making her US debut at BAM. Favorite theater credits include Ivanov by Anton Chekhov at the Théâtre de l’Odéon, directed by Luc Bondy (2014—15) and La Double Mort de l’Horloger by Odön von Horvath at the Théâtre National de Chaillot, directed by André Engel (2013). She is also a director, having directed Les lois de l’hospitalité by Olivia Rosenthal (2008, 2011).

Laura Pels
Producer

Laura Pels is a French-born American whose conviction is that “a play must be performed.” She believes that the theater is a powerful way to bring awareness and joy to people—provided the work is of high quality. From her earliest involvement in theater, beginning with the Laura Pels International Foundation for Theater and the Roundabout Theatre Company in New York, then through her direction of le Théâtre de l’Atelier in Paris, Pels has worked tirelessly to introduce important plays to international audiences and breathe new life into the theater. Encouraged by the positive response to her French theater productions performed in English, she has also endeavored to present American theater-goers with French plays in French. In doing so, the magic and integrity of the original language is revealed and a whole new world of theater is made accessible to new audiences.

Laura Pels Productions has brought the following plays to the US to a number of prestigious venues, including the Lincoln Center Festival, Kennedy Center, the Shakespeare Theatre Company, and BAM: Roland Topor’s L’Hiver sous la Table, directed by Zabou Breitman with Isabelle Carré and Dominique Pinon, Théâtre de l’Atelier production, 2003—04; La Maladie de la Mort by Marguerite Duras, directed by Bérangère Bonvoisin with Fanny Ardant, Théâtre de la Madeleine production, 2006; Premier Amour by Samuel Beckett, directed by Sami Frey, Théâtre de l’Atelier production, 2009—10, 2012; Les Liaisons Dangereuses by Choderlos de Laclos, adapted by Christopher Hampton, directed by John Malkovich, Théâtre de l’Atelier production 2013; La Vénus au Phacochère, directed by Christophe Lidon, Théâtre de l’Atelier production 2013; and Savannah Bay by Marguerite Duras, directed by Didier Bezace, Théâtre de l’Atelier production 2014.

Théâtre de l’Atelier, Paris

Nestled in the heart of Montmartre, the Théâtre de l’Atelier has become a cultural icon of Paris, cherished by artists and the public alike. Laura Pels assumed leadership of this historic theater in 1999, joining an impressive roster of artistic directors since its creation in 1922 by Charles Dullin. Over the years, the theater has become known for its adventurous programming and diverse offering of plays, giving audiences the power to discover important works by French, English, and American authors, directors, and designers.

During her tenure as Director of the Théâtre de l’Atelier, Pels produced more than 45 plays including: La Controverse de Valladolid by Jean Claude Carrière; Poèmes à Lou by Apollinaire; Trahisons by Pinter (translated by Eric Kahane); La Ménagerie de Verre and Baby Doll by Tennessee Williams (translated by Jean-Michel Desprats); Hilda by Marie N’diaye; Le Désarroi de M. Peters by Arthur Miller (translated by Isi Beller); Les Braises by Sandor Marai (adaptation by Claude Rich); L’Hiver Sous La Table by Roland Topor (winner of six Molière Awards in 2004); Créanciers by Strindberg; La Musica and La Douleur (directed by Patrice Chéreau and Thierry Thieû Niang) by Marguerite Duras; Caligula by Camus; Adultères by Woody Allen; Fin de Partie by Beckett (directed and starring Charles Berling), Premier Amour also by Beckett (adapted and played by Sami Frey), and Oh les beaux jours by Beckett (directed by Marc Paquien); La Nuit juste avant les forêts by Bernard-Marie Koltès (directed by Patrice Chéreau and Thierry Thieû Niang); L’année de la pensée magique by Joan Didion (adapted by Christopher Thompson); La Fontaine, adapted and directed by Fabrice Luchini; Les Liaisons Dangereuses by Choderlos de Laclos (adapted by Christopher Hampton and directed by John Malkovich); La Locandiera by Carlo Goldoni (directed by Marc Paquien); and Marguerite Duras: Les Trois Âges (Le Square, Marguerite et le Président, and Savannah Bay), directed by Didier Bezace.

In January 2015, esteemed director and actor Didier Long took over the role of artistic director of Théâtre de l’Atelier.
